In one of the latest Cash in Transit attacks, a 39-year old suspect has been arrested. It is believed that he was part of a group of armed robbers who blew up a cash delivery vehicle along the R71 near Gravelotte, Limpopo, on 1 August.

49% Increase in cash in transit attacks

There has been a significant 49% increase in Cash in Transit attacks for the first eight months of 2017 when compared to the same period last year, says SABRIC (The South African Banking Risk Information Centre) CEO, Kalyani Pillay on 7 September. Wahl Bartmann, Fidelity Group CEO, confirmed that just two weeks ago eight to ten armed suspects had gained access to the Fidelity Vryheid depot making off with millions of Rands. Last week he confirmed there were a further two incidents, one in Brits and one in the Free State, but both were fortunately unsuccessful.

"Unfortunately we have seen a spike in Cash in Transit heists across the country this year and these incidents exacerbate an already dire situation of attacks on Cash in Transit vehicles and staff," says Bartmann.

According to stats compiled by SABRIC between 1 January and 31 August 2017, there have been 232 incidents across the industry involving various modus operandi, cross-pavement attacks being the most prevalent.

"We know that syndicates perpetrating these kinds of crimes are highly skilled and organised. We are constantly evolving our technology and changing our procedures to ensure we stay one step ahead of the criminals. Unfortunately the increase in crime, coupled with high unemployment is impacting on the number of robberies and heists. We have also seen a move from urban areas, where we have clamped down quite substantially, to the more outlying areas as evidenced by Friday's attack."

Pillay concurs saying heists are no longer confined to urban areas only but also occur in rural towns across South Africa.

The provinces that experienced the highest increases in the past eight months are Western Cape followed by North West and Gauteng.

SABRIC is working closely with Fidelity and other CIT companies and law enforcement officials to analyse the crime risk information and jointly come up with strategies and risk mitigation measures to collectively deal with this crisis.

Bartmann cautions consumers to stay alert, particularly as we move towards the festive season where heists of this nature typically spike even further. "We know wherever there is money there is risk and this risk does escalate at certain times of the month and typically during the latter half of the year."
